

More of Tomorrow's Leaders Could Be Getting Their Heads Together Today!

They Could Be Learning Entrepreneurship

The National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship (NFTE) inspires low-income young people ages 11–18 toward economic success. We have trained over 3,200 Certified Entrepreneurship Teachers worldwide to help at-risk youngsters improve business and personal skills — and to dream of a bright future.

Harvard,* Brandeis, the David H. Koch Foundation and the Charles G. Koch Foundation have studied the effects of NFTE's award-winning curriculum and determined that learning entrepreneurship:

- Increases interest in attending college 32%
- Expands business knowledge by a factor of 20
- Boosts occupational aspirations 44%
- Augments minority business ownership experience by a factor of 4

Entrepreneurship can be taught. With the help of supporters like The Goldman Sachs Foundation, Microsoft Corporation and the Shelby Cullom Davis Foundation, NFTE has guided over 96,000 underserved youngsters to embrace and master free enterprise.

NFTE is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization and we rely on your donations to help tomorrow's leaders get off the streets and onto the road to success. Donations may be made online at our website: www.nfte.com or by calling: (800) FOR-NFTE.

N F T E™
Teaching Youth to Build Businesses

Empowering Youth through Entrepreneurship.

The National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship, Inc.
120 Wall Street, 29th Floor • New York, NY 10005

NFTE is extremely grateful to Gazelles, Inc. for donating this advertisement.

*The Harvard Graduate School of Education Study is in progress. These outcomes represent the first year of findings and are not yet conclusive. Full reports of each study are available upon request.

Copyright © 2004 by: The National Foundation for Teaching Entrepreneurship, Inc. (NFTE)